in 2007, scientists discovered that corals are able to detect blue light, which triggers the production of so-called cryptochromes in coral cells.